

wedding invitation etiquette guide

abbreviations

Abbreviations should NOT be used for wedding invitations and accompanying cards. If you do choose to list the date or any other information in a more casual manner, be consistent across all pieces of the invitation suite.

honor vs. pleasure

The phrase “request the honor of your presence” is traditionally used for a ceremony taking place in a place of worship (church, synagogue, etc). It’s appropriate to use “request the pleasure of your company” for a ceremony taking place in a non-religious location. You are welcome to spell it as either “honor” or “honour”, but be sure to make match it on your reply card with “favor” or “favour.”

divorced parents

It is customary to list divorced parents on separate lines and without the word “and” between them.

widows

Women who are widowed should be addressed according to their late husband’s name, with “Mrs.” preceding their name (i.e. Mrs. Robert Smith).

addresses

When listing the addresses, only the street address, city and state should be listed. The zip code should not be listed on the invitation. State names should be spelled out.

reception information

If the ceremony and reception are at the same location, a separate reception card is not needed. Reception information can be listed at the bottom of the invitation card.
